Reupholstering costs are comparable to buying new furniture because you are essentially getting a new piece of furniture on an old frame. Why is reupholstering so expensive? It's a time- and labor-intensive process that involves specialized skills.

Recovering furniture refers simply to the process of removing the old fabric and putting on new fabric. But leaving the old padding not doing anything else. More on this later..

Reupholstering furniture includes a complete tear down of the piece, removing all fabric, padding, and the support systems. This process ensures the end product not only looks better, but really is better. Once completed you have a brand new piece that is clean inside and out, and is ready for many more years of enjoyment.

Reupholstering is usually performed on heirloom, antique furniture or on other types of furniture that can't be replaced.
